

CENSUS of Modern Greek Literature: Check-list of English Language Sources
Useful in the Study of Modern Greek Literature (1824-1987).
New Haven: Modern Greek Studies Association, 1990.

This computer file includes, from the CENSUS named above, all the English-language translations of works of nineteenth and twentieth century Greek authors that were published in book-form in the period 1824-1987. Most of these translations are listed in Chapter 7 of the CENSUS; their original entry number from the CENSUS is preserved in the present file.

Total number of 19th and 20th century Greek authors with English translations published in book-form 1824-1987: 137.
Total number of entries in the present file: 352.

Introductory note (taken from the beginning of Chapter 7 [pp. 71] and the Introduction , pp. xiv-xvi, and also p. xii, of the CENSUS):

The (Greek) authors (of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries) are listed alphabetically by their last names. In the entries the names have been given in the actual forms in which they appear in the sources (insofar as could be determined). In the (centered) headings, however, the spelling has been generally standardized to follow the transliteration scheme proposed by Linos Politis in his History of Modern Greek Literature (Robert Liddell, tr. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1973. Reprinted with corrections, 1975). A guide to the transcription used here is given below; however, exceptions are made when the name is already well-known in a different form, viz. Demetrios Capetanakis, C.P. Cavafy (not Kavafis), John Chioles, Kay Cicellis, Andonis Decavalles, N.C. Germanacos, Stratis Haviaras, Vasso Kalamaras, George Thaniel, usually as the author has lived extensively outside Greece.

Under the heading of each author the works are arranged in the alphabetical order of their title.

An asterisk placed at the beginning of an entry indicates that it has not been possible to inspect that item personally: the information is that available from bibliographical sources.

Note: Authors prior to the nineteenth century are incorporated in Part II of the chapter on Literary History (=CENSUS, Chapter 6). A separate computer file has been formed for their works appearing in English translation in book-form.

Transcription (of authors' names in the headings)

As is evident from the many forms in which the names of Greek authors appear in English, there is no standard system of transcription.¹ Yet it would be cumbersome for the user of the check-list to have to search for each author, in either the chapter on authors or the index, under different forms of his or her name. Thus a unified system, such as that used by Linos Politis in his History of Modern Greek Literature,¹ has been followed. Greek letters (and combinations) lacking a unique equivalent in the Latin alphabet have been transcribed as follows:

	γ:	g
	δ:	d
	η:	i
	θ:	th
	κ:	k (not c)
	υ:	y
	φ:	f (not ph)
	χ:	ch (not h or kh)
Diphthongs	ει and οι:	ι αι: ου: ου
Double consonants	μπ:	mb (b in word-initial position);
	ντ:	nt (d in word initial position);
	γγ, γκ:	ng (g in word-initial position).

The last names of women authors have been given in the genitive case (without -ς).

The names of editors and translators have not been transcribed under the scheme used for the Greek authors; instead, their names have been unified under their fullest and most frequent form.

¹ op.cit. See especially his “Note on Transcription” immediately following his table of contents. Linos Politis’ system of transcription has been adopted, though not without a few reservations as to its consistency, e.g. ντ might perhaps better have been transcribed as ‘nd’ in place of ‘nt’.
